SATURDAY, MAY 22, 1575.

THE law of "Civil Rights" had a curous illustration in Georgia recently Hon, A. H. Stephens, the editor of the Macon Telegraph, and a local politician got into a luxuriously furnished car upor the Macon and Western Division of the Central Railroad, and lighted segars with the intention of enjoying a smoke while settling the political affairs of Georgia. Their intention was frustrated, lowever, by a colored passenger, who politely informed them they were in the wrong car, as that particular one was set apart exclusively for colored people, with whom, a glance showed the gentlemen, it was filled. Evidently their prej-udice against the colored race is not as strong an article as is sometimes found in more Northern latitudes, for they insisted upon remaining where they were To settle the matter the conductor was appealed to, and he informed the Vice President of the late Confederate States vacate their seats and find others in an adjoining car, as the one they were in was devoted solely to the accommodation of the colored people. Consequently, they and his friends that they must at once

Richmond could hardly be compared to the celebrated Jerusalem, which was a city that was a unity in itself, because she is some little scattered around, and is entirely different from what I had expected to find it, but that she aint what was expected, it may be as much the fault of your correspondent as hers. Joking aside however, Richmond is an old-fashioned good town, and if the inhabitants ain't as well off as they were some time since, we all know the reason why, and to their credit be it said are doing what they can to set themselves up on their ante belom had been, where it did formerly, with its beautiful square around it, and without doubt its beauty compares very favorably with like improvements elsewhere, and reminds one of the colored people. Consequently, they were turned out, Mr. Stephens delivering the following touching farewell:

The eightieth annual Council of the Diocese of Virginia met this morning in St. Paul Church, both Bishops being present with say 150 clergy and 160 lay delegates. The opening sermon was preached by Dr. R. H. McKim, of Alexandria, and was just one hour and fifteen delegates. The opening sermon was preached by Dr. R. H. McKim, of Alexandria, and was just one hour and fifteen minutes long, and was one of; the most exhaustive efforts your correspondent has ever been called on to hear, and am sure he would have given it to us in serial form had he known that we were accustomed to have our dinner at 1 p. M. After the sermon the sacrament was administered, following which the members of the Council proceeded to the basement of the church when the roll of the clergy was called, after which a Committee on Credentials, of lay delegates, was appointed, when an adjournment took place, at least your correspondent supposed it did, as he didn't wat to see as he was so powerful hungry.

Gentlemen, you know me. The world knows me. I have been a successful school teacher, and have attained some notoriety at the bar. I have served my State in the councils of the nation. I have been Vice Piesident of the Confederate States of America, the most brilliant galaxy of Confederate stars that ever showe in the firmament of nations. I have successfully "stood" twice for Congress in my district, and am now on an errand of mercy, having been to Griffin to address the State Association of Teachers. I have already paid my fare, and paid no attention to the franking and mileage privileges offered by Congress; but this is the first time. I was ever called upon to vacate a car because I was not considered as good as a negro.

THE money column of the Philadelphia Ledger, which is the valuable feature of the paper—without conveying any reflection upon the merits of the obituary department—has this to say about business: "There is a willing disposition all round to consider the worst of the crisis past, and that henceforth business will bear a more cheerful aspect.
